A Study in Steampunk is an interactive thriller, where your choices drive the story. Every protagonist, every major and minor character, every location, every situation is controlled by your choices. Take control of the Empire or risk its fall. Become a secret agent or mastermind a revolution from within. Make your choice and the fate of the Empire will be yours. On the streets of London, in the halls of the court, and between the wires of the railroads, the lives and deaths of an empire hang in the balance of your choices. The choice you make will decide what you will be: King or Queen. Conqueror or Defender. Hero or Assassin. Your Path Is Yours! About This Game: Choice by Gaslight: The Fate of the Empire is the third in a series of interactive fiction novels written by Heather Albano and illustrated by Elizabeth Knobel. Since the Day of the Plague, when the undead rose from the mists of time and stalked the mortal world, the Vlaski Empire has conquered London, New York, Paris, and above all, Constantinople--first by declaring its enemies decadent, then by enslaving them. Having established its dominion, the Empire is now attempting to consolidate its rule and push back into the shadows the last vestiges of reason and science. But most of all, it wants to keep its secret--the ability to call down the dark powers of undeath. Weakened by a series of defeats and painful torture, the Empire's military and secret police are vulnerable. And now, spies and freelance agents are the only weapons left to the resistance. Thirteen in all, each a master of their own deadly speciality, they are a dwindling force--but one that makes no mistake: The fate of the Empire hangs in the balance. And now it's up to you to choose its destiny. MLDB_WRITE_PORTABILITY_H Influence of the cone apex on the radiologic and histologic appearance of instrumented diseased lumbar discs and facets. Treating a lumbar degenerative disease by surgical means can have a significant influence on the biomechanics of the region by lengthening or shortening the arc of the motion. This article demonstrates how the degree of posterior instrumentation will alter the motion of a diseased segment and consequently alter the radiologic and histologic appearance, and potentially influence the results of the surgery. This biomechanical study was performed to determine the effect of pedicle screws on the biomechanics of diseased lumbar intervertebral discs and facet joints. A cylindrical intervertebral disc model, with the nucleus pulposus intact, was instrumented with rods and transverse connectors to provide stability. Polyethylene, carbon fiber reinforced rods, and titanium screws with cortical bone and a chemically attached polycaprolactone interface were compared. This model was constructed using the "reverse engineering" technique to establish the best mechanical properties for a range of pelvic and upper lumbar joint compressive loads. The polyethylene, carbon fiber, titanium screw constructs exhibited higher compressive stiffness and lower stiffness ratios than similar constructs with PEEK rods and titanium screws. The polyethylene-carbon fiber-screw construct behaved similarly to the titanium screw construct in terms of this biomechanical comparison. At the lumbar lamina-facet junctions, with the lumbar vertebrae in extension, the low-cross-linker polyethylene-carbon fiber-screw construct exhibited a much greater traction force and higher load to failure. With the lumbar vertebra in flexion, the carbon fiber-screw construct demonstrated greater compressive load and load to failure than the polyethylene-carbon fiber constructs, with the titanium-screw, carbon fiber, and polyethylene constructs behaving similarly. In this model, motion is restricted by the stiffness of the constraints; if the stiffness of the constraints is inadequate, motion will be greater than in development of the tibial tuberosity of the human brain. Tibial tuberosities (TTs) of 4 human fetal crania were studied by means of histology and 3-dimensional reconstruction. The medial and lateral tibial tuberosities were formed by the superficial and deep layers of the tibial lateral and medial collateral ligament, respectively. The medial tibial tuberosity was shown to be situated in the plane between the ACL and the superficial layers of the lateral collateral ligament. Tt was innervated by the medial nerve, and its blood supply was associated with the medial collateral ligament. The results of this investigation suggest that medial tibial tuberosity may have a proprioceptive function, related to the joint capsule and the superficial layers of the medial collateral ligament, which is located behind the medial tibial tuberosity.Q: problems with sub-sampling a 2D numpy array with Pandas I have the following 2D numpy array: data = array([[1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10], [11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20], Zilcitin is a highly potent topical antifungal agent with a broad antifungal spectrum including Aspergillus, Candida and Cryptococcus. Topical zilcitin presents particular advantages over other systemic approaches, such as the ability to penetrate the stratum corneum and the papillary ridge and treat the deep fungal structures, and also over oral agents the avoidance of antifungal resist
