regional park system, see East Bay, California. The East Bay Regional Park District is a regional park and regional park system in the East Bay Area of the San Francisco Bay Area of California. The East Bay Regional Park District covers the area between Emeryville and Berkeley in Alameda County. The district maintains almost all of the land from the San Francisco Bay to the coast. The district encompasses. History Founded in 1937, the park district offers diverse recreational opportunities for visitors, from natural areas with trails to museums, outdoor concerts, and food festivals. The East Bay Regional Park District serves the communities of Alameda, Berkeley, Castro Valley, El Cerrito, Emeryville, Fremont, Oakland, Piedmont, Richmond, San Leandro, San Lorenzo, and Walnut Creek. The district has 72,000 acres of land, including more than 75 miles of trails. Many areas within the district have been designated as heritage or natural areas. These areas offer opportunities for exploration, recreational activities, and learning about the park's history. Visitors to the district can enjoy the beautiful views and hiking trails that wind through these areas. The East Bay Regional Park District covers a territory about twice the size of Manhattan's Central Park. The mission of the park district is "to provide quality recreational opportunities through protecting and preserving open space, promoting sustainable development, educating and inspiring people to experience the diversity of East Bay life." The district includes 22,000 acres of urban parks, wetlands and undeveloped coastal lands. The district is one of the county's leading employers with over 5,000 employees. The district employs a
