I have a function `makeState :: State s -> State (s -> s)` The problem is that Type family parameters is not allowed in a type family. But in the case above, I want to make the functions type of its parameter as a type family parameter. I mean type of its parameter should be a type family. Then can I make this function's type type family? A: Normally, you would use the GADT-pattern data `State = forall s. State (s -> s)` However, you can't do that if the type `s` is polymorphic (that is, it depends on other parameters, like `String`, or `[Int]`, or many others). Since the type `s` is not made explicit, you can't make it a type family. If you prefer, you can just add a type signature to the function and constrain `s` to have a particular type, like so `makeState :: forall s. State s -> State (s -> s)` `makeState (State f) = State (f :: s -> s)` Or just use the `State` constructor `makeState :: State s -> State (s`

The latest release of the year in Hindi cinema Khamoshiyan movie is a hard-hitting thriller movie, which is based on a real life story of a teenage girl. A group of influential legal academics has launched a bid to take the law into the digital age — arguing that the web should replace the courts as the new touchstone of legal principles. The proposal could, if successful, end the centuries-old tradition of ‘stare decisis’, the doctrine that has shaped legal decisions for centuries, making it possible for future courts to interpret law as it stands and to pass new rulings which are expected to stick. The US-based team of academics is campaigning for the old approach to be replaced with an ‘online precedent’ system that would help shape and respond to legal questions as they arise online. ‘If we use the internet not just as a medium of communication, but as a medium of governance, it’s a very interesting question,’ said Robert Barnes, professor of law at the University of Virginia and one of the legal academics spearheading the ‘internet age’ idea. ‘Are there legal principles that should be reflected on by the internet?’ The plan to change the way courts make law is particularly attractive in the light of an ongoing campaign that seeks to reduce the role of judges in the US and elsewhere. Many academics argue that the retention of a strong judiciary and the established principle that judges should make rules — known as ‘stare decisis’ — is one of the pillars that makes the US legal system work. But the internet age idea has met resistance even among the participants. ‘For some reason, there’s a widespread ignorance of the power of the internet as a medium of governance and communicative power, and the way that it’s going to change so many areas of our lives,’ said Professor Barnes. The influential team of legal academics argues that the internet will become a key source of legal rules in the next few decades. Internet users will draw on existing rules about defamation, the right to privacy, intellectual property, business models, and even tax as they create new ways to use the web, to share information, or to trade. Professor Barnes said: ‘What I am trying to think about is in terms of development and innovation, the internet age, rather than just this positive idea of how it’s going
